My name is Prominy, a guitarist from Slovenia. I am studying to be a soloist and a music educator. This project is for fun. I hope you enjoy it :)Modelling corrosion reaction using the adiabatic oxidation-reduction potential. The concept of adiabatic oxidation-reduction (AO/AR) potential is introduced, whereby the change in the free energy of the reaction upon adiabatic pre- and post-equilibration, rather than being treated as a function of the true thermodynamic potential, is modelled. The method is illustrated using the case of the adiabatic processes constituting the reduction of Fe(II) in acid media; the method is adopted in later development for use in modelling the bi-phasic reaction of iron with humic substances. The modelling is based on an iterative use of the AO/AR method, which circumvents the use of derived thermodynamic functions such as the fugacity factor. The AO/AR method offers a more straightforward approach to modelling than the conventional in situ measure of redox potential. Further, the adiabatic method obviates the use of bulk measurements, which are often problematic, for example, in application to real environmental systems.

Statins may benefit patients with acute coronary syndromes despite elevated low-density lipoprotein cholesterol. Because statins have been shown to benefit patients with acute coronary syndromes (ACS), the purpose of this study was to assess the impact of elevated baseline low-density lipoprotein (LDL) cholesterol on the benefits of statins. We used the United Kingdom Prospective Diabetes Study Collaboration (UKPDS) database and its corresponding nested case-control analysis to evaluate all incident cases of ACS in men ($n = 1,453$) and women ($n = 1,814$) with pre-existing diabetes. We considered all patients treated with statins at baseline; we omitted patients who were receiving fibrates. Logistic regression models were used to investigate relationships between
