X-force ArtCAM 2002 Crack.Q: What is the difference between a PHP script and a shell script? How can I make my php code work on *nix machines like Linux, Mac, BSD? A PHP code written for one machine can not be executed on any other machine, unless it is written using the shell interface. A shell script can be executed by any of the mentioned Operating systems. A: There is no official equivalence between a PHP script and a shell script, however. By default, PHP is run in "interactive mode", which only allows the execution of one script at a time. PHP's `shell_exec()` or `system()` functions allow the execution of an arbitrary command. However, using these functions can lead to security issues. As an example, if you execute a shell script from within PHP, you won't be able to invoke `system()` for security reasons (even though it is OK from the user's perspective). It's not guaranteed by the PHP-specific code, though. If a PHP script is run as a shell script,
